Business Environment in Myanmar

Located in Southeast Asia with a population of more than 50 million, Myanmar, formerly known as Burma, is often referred to as Asia's last major frontier economy. The country has significant natural resources, a young workforce and borders the important economies of China, India and Thailand.

In response to a dramatic series of reforms which were put in place since Myanmar's military stepped aside and a quasi-civilian government was installed in 2011, the EU lifted most of its Myanmar sanctions in April 2013. Today, only the EU arms embargo remains in place.

After the democratic elections in 2015, resulting in a landslide victory of Aung San Suu Kyi's National League for Democracy, the US followed the European example and lifted its OFAC sanctions in October 2016.

Since its political opening, Myanmar has seen a surge of interest from international companies to invest in and trade with Myanmar.

To attract foreign investment, the country has embarked on a comprehensive reform process and is currently overhauling its legal framework to simplify doing business, increase transparency and strengthen the rule of law.

The relevant business structures for foreign investors are private limited companies and branch or representative offices of foreign companies. Other available business forms, such as general partnerships or public limited liability companies, are currently of little relevance to foreign investors.
